

Fix Retention Before You Buy More Leads

Quiet weeks often come from client drop-off after the visit, not just a lack of new traffic.

①

The leak is still too big to build around

If clients keep dropping after the visit, more first bookings just keep refilling the same gap.

2

Your own client list is warmer than a cold lead queue

Before chasing strangers, check where existing clients are closest to coming back.

YOUR EXISTING CLIENT LIST

They know you

Familiarity
lowers friction.

They've worked with you

Trust already exists.

Timing makes sense

Their need may be returning.

Easier to reach

You have the easier in.

WARMER. CLOSER. READY.

VS.

COLD LEAD QUEUE

They don't know you

No relationship.
No context.

Trust has to be earned

More steps before they'll engage.

Timing is unknown

May not need you now.

Harder to reach

Messages compete.
Easy to ignore.

COLDER. FARTHER. HARDER.

Manual chasing keeps the real problem hidden

If repeat visits only happen when someone remembers to follow up, the system is still broken.

MANUAL EFFORT

Ad hoc. Inconsistent.
Easy to forget.

VS.

MISSING SYSTEM

Missing system.
Leaks repeat business.

4

Fix the return route first, then judge the traffic problem clearly

Once the repeat-booking leak is tighter, it becomes much easier to see whether you truly need more leads.

NEXT STEP

Map the leak first. Build fast when the route is clear.

Email Growth Check

Use this when you still need diagnosis.

£197

OR

7-Day Revenue Rescue Sprint

Use this when the first retention fix is already clear.

£997

The right next step depends on what is already obvious.

222
EMAILS